

How is it that rabbit became frightened of noise? Why does the sun rise slowly? Before science explained it all, a Hopi legend revealed some reasons. In this delightful re-telling of an ancient fable by award-winning author Terri Fields, Rabbit sets out to teach Sun some manners about being too hot, but Sun isn't really interested in changing. The two engage in a battle that forever changes both the sun and the rabbit.

For fans of acclaimed author, Joseph Bruchac, a First Nations origin story of how humans acquired fire with the help of the animals.

Imagine a time when humans huddled together to keep from freezing in the winters. A time without fire.

Ancient stories of how it came to us can be found in virtually every human society and the indigenous cultures of North America are no exception.

Such is the case with this Algonkian story of how a boy, with the aid of Fox, stole fire from the deadly monsters who selfishly kept it for themselves. Be ready to both enjoy and learn as you read this vibrantly illustrated telling of First Fire.

About the Illustrator

David Kanietakeron Fadden is an Akwesasne Mohawk artist who was born in New York and grew up in Onchiota. David's illustrations have appeared in several books, including Skywoman: Legends of the Iroquois and A Peacemaker for Warring Nations: The Founding of the Iroquois League (with Joseph Bruchac), as well as in the Discovery Channel's, "How the West was Lost: Always the Enemy." His work has been exhibited at the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of the American Indian. David lives with his family in Kawenoke, at Akwesasne Mohawk Territory, in Ontario, Canada.

The Bible tells us that “God so loved the world, that he gave his only Son, that whoever believes in him should not die but have eternal life” (John 3:16). Drawing on quotations from holy Scripture, award-winning author, Demi, weaves together the miraculous birth, life, death, and resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth, the Messiah who took upon himself the sins of the world, triumphed over death, and redeemed humanity.

A Peacemaker for Warring Nations

The Founding of the Iroquois League

by Joseph Bruchac

illustrated by David Kanietakeron Fadden

In A Peacemaker for Warring Nations, renowned Native author Joseph Bruchac draws from the teachings of both contemporary and past Iroquois tradition bearers in telling the story of how “the Peacemaker,” a divine messenger sent by the Creator, helped to bring an end to the bitter warring of the Five Iroquois Nations (the Mohawk, Onondaga, Oneida, Cayuga, and Seneca) and how he founded the famed League of the Iroquois, which was later to influence the US Constitution. The book is beautifully and accurately illustrated by David Kanietakeron Fadden, a respected Mohawk artist whose work honors his deep indigenous roots.

Guru Nanak

First of the Sikhs

by DEMI

Guru Nanak (1469-1539) is the founder of the Sikh religion, which has over 25 million followers worldwide. As a young man, he embarked on an inspired mission that took him from the sacred Himalayas to the holy city of Mecca, always preaching a message of one God, and of peace and equality for all. Award-winning author, Demi, recounts the remarkable life of Guru Nanak, who today is revered by Hindus and Muslims alike.

Selections from the Book

At five years of age, when his Hindu teacher said, "There are many gods and goddesses who provide for us," Nanak replied, "There is only one God, Lord of the universe. He is the sole creator and provider."

When his Hindu teacher said rituals will wash away your sins and appease the gods, Nanak responded, "Rituals are unnecessary. Repeat God's true Name to cleanse your soul. Fill your heart and soul with love for Him."

When his Hindu teacher said, "There are four main castes, brahmin (priest) is the highest and shudra (laborer) is the lowest," Nanak said, "All humans are equal. Only our own actions can uplift or lower us!"

At that time Barbar the Great was on the warpath and his army began to attack Emnabad. Thousands of people were about to be killed. Guru Nanak ran right up to Barbar's horse and grabbing the reigns shouted, "O Barbar! Stop this bloodshed!"

Barbar the Great's sword was raised, ready to strike, but he was so shocked by such valor and by seeing such a glowing spiritual face, that he did not harm Guru Nanak. Instead Guru Nanak was put in prison where he was forced to grind corn on millstones.

But in prison Guru Nanak performed yet another miracle! When he started to sing, the other prisoners joined him, and the millstones began to turn and grind the corn on their own.

Barbar the Great was again so astounded by the holy Guru's miracle that he had to release him.

After twenty-five years of traveling and spreading his message of peace and equality, Guru Nanak returned to his home in Kartarpur.

On September 22, 1539, Guru Nanak told his followers that he would now depart from the mortal world. He covered himself with a white sheet, and his soul departed from his body. When the white sheet was removed, only beautiful fragrant flowers were seen in place of his body.

In death, Guru Nanak had shown that good deeds and the remembrance of God can make our life and our afterlife as beautiful as the fragrant flowers of his death shroud.

Little Bear

An Inuit Folktale

retold by Dawn Casey illustrated by Amanda Hall

In this lyrical retelling of an Inuit folktale by Dawn Casey, a lonely old woman adopts a polar bear cub with no mother of his own. Amanda Hall's luminous artwork celebrates the radiant snow lands of the north, and the warmth of the relationship between a human being and a wild animal. With tender themes of loving and letting go, and the need to honor the wild, Little Bear will touch the heart of young readers

Inside, the old woman put new moss in her lamp so it burned bright. She held the bear cub close until he was warm. He wriggled and yawned in her arms.

She held him. And she sang. "Ku-lu, my little one, my little bear, my son." And she smiled, as the bear began to purr.

His fur was no longer fine and fluffy, it grew thick and soft and silky.

Now when the old woman went out, the bear skipped and skidded behind her.

The village children loved the bear. They loved playing with him, rolling and sliding and tumbling. Sometimes, by accident, he broke their toy kayaks with his great paws, but he always took care, so that he never harmed anyone. The children came every morning to play with the bear, calling and laughing. The old woman's days were full of joy.

And the bear grew.

The men of the bear's village came running, panting, shouting: "Stop! Stop! Leave him alone!" But it was too late. The bear lay, unmoving, his white fur stained red.

The men returned to their village with the bear on their sled. The children wept to see their friend hurt.

But the old woman knew that he could heal. She put oil on the cut to soothe the pain, and she bandaged the bear's wounded leg. She tended the bear until he was well again.

Spirit of the Cheetah

A Somali Tale

by Karen Lynn Williams & Khadra Mohammed illustrated by Julia Cairns

Young Roblay runs through his Somali village practicing for the big race, where only the fastest runners will be declared men. He turns for advice to his grandfather, who tells Roblay of the mighty Shabelle River, which is strong and swift like a cheetah. Roblay must capture that spirit if he is to finish among the winners of the race and become a man. Inspired by her father's storytelling, Khadra Mohammed joins Karen Lynn Williams in retelling this Somali coming-of-age tale, beautifully illustrated by artist Julia Cairns. The story of a proud people who once lived together peacefully and drew wisdom from the animals, it is sure to generate enthusiastic discussion in the classroom. An appendix provides further information on the cheetah—the fastest land animal on earth and now an endangered species.

A little boy named Zen is searching for his ox. He loves his ox, who is just like him—playful and joyful. But sometimes the ox is also wild and angry and furious. Without his ox, Zen is lost and very, very sad.

No anger,
no ego, no greed, no ignorance, Zen rides his ox home. They rest and forget about the journey. The sun is high in the sky. The rope and whip are left in the grass.

Written from Herman Melville's study, Writer-In-Residence, Jana Laiz tells the untold story of how the great American novelist and short story writer Herman Melville (the author of Moby Dick and Billy Budd, Sailor) came to be a household name.

This historical adventure is a true story told through the voice of Melville's nine-year-old granddaughter, Eleanor.

Seventeen-year-old Alexis Portillo embarks on a harrowing journey from Honduras to Baltimore in the hopes of starting a better life. Over a decade later, Alex recounts his story to author and activist Jana Laiz in this bilingual retelling. A modern-day odyssey of what one immigrant faces as he makes the treacherous journey out of unfathomable living conditions.

"A detailed and moving account of one 17- year-old's harrowing immigrant experience told in achingly beautiful writing. I loved the book! . . . This immigrant experience honestly reflects the trauma, bravery and survival against all odds that people go through in pursuit of freedom."
